

Why do I love what I love?

---

If I have missed the mark, and have loved lesser things, as greater things, should I be taught a lesson? You know, hurricanes are Good at doing their Job. Rather effective, I would say. What is the Job of a Hurricane, you may ask? Perhaps, it's to teach you a lesson! Have I loved the lesser things, as the greater, and the greater things, as the lesser? Am I backwards in life? Do I need to be taught a lesson? You know, it could be in your best interest, to learn to Love God more than you have. Sometime's, you need to be forced to learn a lesson, perhaps, there is no other way, than to learn from an experience. What is it like living through a good hurricane? Well, a good hurricane, can totally destroy everything that you own, turning everything that you have into debris, even, what you consider a strong home, that you are living in, can easily be turned into worthless building materials, with nothing left intact. A hurricane can kill a person, from either throwing the person great distances, then having them land harshly into the ground killing them, or by having debris impact into them, thus killing them. Now, suppose, that you are watching the weather channel one day, and there is a broadcast saying that a hurricane is out there, and traveling into your neighborhood. Do you continue watching the weather channel, to learn about the update of the storm's progress? Perhaps, yes. What do you do, if the storm is getting closer and closer to you? One possibility, could be, that you pack some clothes, get into your car, and go somewhere, where the storm has not been predicted to go. This could be a good plan! You could stay at a motel somewhere, and not be harmed by the storm. But, you may worry about your home being destroyed. Is there anything that you can do? Can you move your home to another place, where it will not be destroyed? You say, this would be impossible to do. What then do you do? You could stay home, and hope that you survive. But, this may put your life in danger! Say, God destroys everything you own. This should cure any desires that you may have for home improvement's. You could hire a bulldozer to come, and collect all of the building debris, and put it into the trash. Because, you say, that the land is still there, and you could rebuild your home from nothing. At least you own the land, and will not have to pay for it again. But, this would cost probably more money than you have, to rebuild your home the way it was before the storm. One cheap possibility, would be instead of rebuilding your home, you just fix the landscaping, and buy tents to live in. This is the cheap route to take. But, you may say that it's not what you want, but, you can not have your home back again, and you do not have enough money to rebuild it again. So what do you? Any better ideas? If God has taught you a lesson, by destroying what you have on this earth, Do you wish to rebel against him, and perhaps, learn the lesson again, at a later time, when you have recovered from the loss? What do you do? Can you think of a better solution to this possible problem? Have you benefited from the lesson that God has taught you? Would telling God that he is wrong, because you say that he is wrong, because of your losses, make any difference? I am not sure that God, would rebuild your home the way it was, after all, it was him that sent the hurricane to destroy it. What do you do? You could hire a lawyer, and sue God for your losses. But, would this be wise, trying to have God repay you for the cost of what you have lost on this earth? Foolishness! Why haven't you learned your lesson? Too stubborn in your ways, perhaps? How many times does God need to teach you this lesson, before you will learn it? Wouldn't it be best to learn to love God, love God more than anything else? Yes, love God with your whole heart! Or, would you curse God to his face, because of your unhappiness? Would you curse God, and live? It would be best to repent, and go on with your life, maybe you would do better in life, the next time. Or, perhaps, the hurricane did not destroy your home, but destroyed the house next door, leaving your home only with a tree fallen down, and nothing else damaged. Would this be a blessing for you? What if you lived the rest of your life, and nothing like this happened to you, but you loved money more than God, and ended up spending an eternity in Hell, where the suffering never ends? You would not like this either, trust me, I would not enjoy it either. God wants you to love him, more than anything else. But, if you choose not to, you could end up spending forever in Hell. The loss is far greater, than what could be regained with money. What do you decide to do? Change your evil way's, while you still have time.

-PAGE 2-